Donald L. Rubin (PhD 1978, University of Minnesota) is Emeritus Professor of Speech Communication, of Language & Literacy Education, and of Linguistics at the University of Georgia. He is also senior researcher at that institution's Center for Health and Risk Communication as well as adjunct professor at Emory University. Rubin teaches mainly in areas of empirical research methods, intercultural communication, language assessment, and language diversity. His current areas of particular research activity include (1) health literacy and health communication message design, (2) public health workforce development in communication to reduce health disparities, and (3) assessment of language proficiency among non-native speakers of English. In 2001 he received two multi-year grants from the National Cancer Institute to examine the language of tobacco industry documents using the techniques of corpus linguistics and discourse analysis. He is currently Co-Investigator and Core Leader for a CDC-funded center for excellence in health communication: the Southern Center for Health, Communication, and Poverty. Rubin's approximately 100 research publications have appeared in such outlets as Journal of Communication, Health Communication, Journal of Literacy Research, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, and Journal of Language and Social Psychology. He is a former editor of the National Communication Association journal *Communication Education (*2003-2005, volumes 52-54). He served as chair of the Department of Speech Communication at the University of Georgia and as faculty associate at the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia.
